I. THE SITUATION IN CUBA

Photographic coverage of 29 October on Sagua La Grande sites 1 and 2 and the Remedios site was poor in quality and does not permit any judgments regarding the nature of activity there. Yesterday's coverage of the San Cristobal and Guanajay sites is not available for interpretation as of 0700 EST.

Castro continues his effort to insinuate his own conditions into the Kennedy-Khrushchev agreement. We have indications from Havana that some Cubans were ready for a negotiated settlement even before the agreement materialized. The alert in Cuba continues. Cuban exile organizations are despondent. ✓

Castro insists that the US must meet his conditions before he will be satisfied with the US assurance that it will not invade Cuba. ↓ ~ ~

We have information that prior to the Khrushchev letter of 28 October there was some feeling in Cuba that the Castro regime should negotiate a settlement with the US at almost any price. ↓ ~ ~

[Press and unofficial] reports agree that the Kennedy-Khrushchev agreement has plunged most of the Cuban exile community into despair. According to one UPI dispatch, some of the more aggressive anti-Castro groups such as Alpha-66 and the Revolutionary Student Directorate have pledged that they will renew their armed fight against Castro. ✓

The USSR is maneuvering to bring its agreement on withdrawal of offensive missiles from Cuba into line with its general disarmament stand. Soviet propaganda continues to work on portrayal of the agreement as a successful Soviet peace initiative, but in Peiping political circles, according to one Western press report, it is described as a "Soviet Munich."

The USSR is also trying to tie the US' hands by suggesting in its propaganda that President Kennedy's commitment not to invade Cuba includes putting a stop to anti-Castro activities by "counterrevolutionaries."

Moscow's refusal to allow UN inspection of the actual dismantling of the missiles appears to be at least in part an attempt to avoid setting a precedent which could be cited in general disarmament negotiations. Soviet First Deputy Foreign Minister Kuznetsov told U Thant in his first discussion with him on 29 October that a UN team can be sent to verify the dismantling after the USSR informs the Security Council that the process has been completed.

This fits with the standard Soviet position on inspection--that there will be no inspection of armaments, but only of disarmament, and then only to verify that the disarmament has been completed.

Kuznetsov said the missiles were already being dismantled in preparation for shipment. He did not say specifically how long the process would take, but U Thant received the impression it would not be more than "a week or two."

Kuznetsov also made it clear that the Soviet government would not permit UN teams to inspect incoming Soviet ships to verify that they were not carrying offensive arms. He noted that Moscow would accept such inspection by Red Cross representatives from neutral countries if they boarded the Soviet freighters from other Soviet or neutral ships. Kuznetsov offered no objections to a suggestion that inspection be carried out in Cuban ports, if the Cuban government agreed.

C1-20

The central theme of Moscow's propaganda commentary for the last 24 hours has been to portray Khrushchev's 28 October letter to the President as a new peace initiative by the Soviet leader. Specific indications as to which areas of international dispute may become the subject of new Soviet initiatives for negotiations are lacking, however,

The USSR is still attempting to broaden the President's commitment not to invade Cuba. Talk of the alleged anti-Castro activities of Cuban "counterrevolutionaries" continues to appear in bloc broadcasts, with a Soviet commentator asking whether President Kennedy, in permitting the "shady maneuverings" of these counterrevolutionaries to continue, is living up to his guarantee that Cuba will not be invaded.

Reaction from Peiping continues to be at variance with the propaganda from Moscow and Eastern Europe. Peiping yesterday carried an extensive TASS item on Khrushchev's 27 October offer to swap missiles in Cuba for US missiles in Turkey, but has played down the final agreement. An NCNA review of the October 30 Peiping press says that "top prominence" is given to Castro's "important" statement of Sunday upholding Cuba's independence and sovereignty. A Western news agency in Peiping reports that news of Khrushchev's October 28 letter was received with "surprise and disapproval," and that the highest political circles in Peiping are talking of a "Soviet Munich."

SOVIET MILITARY STATUS

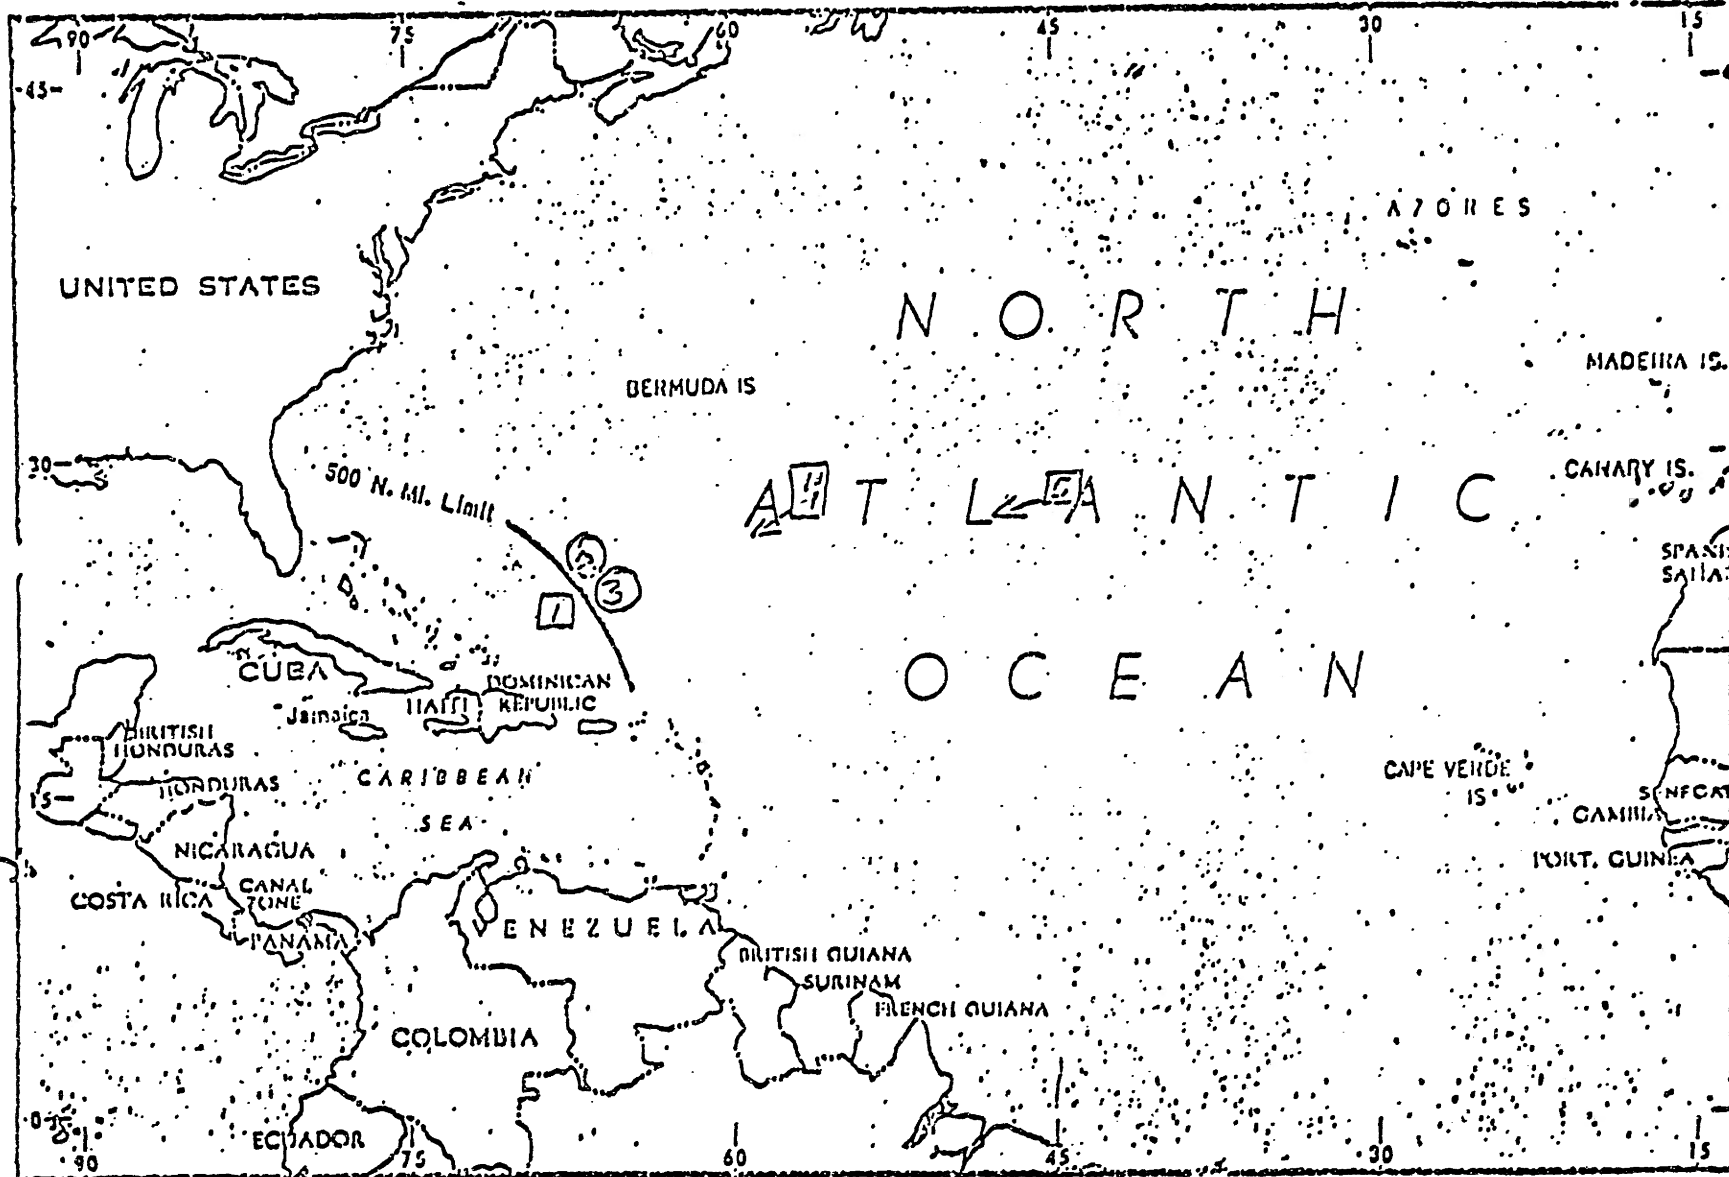

No major changes have been detected in the past 24 hours in the disposition or readiness posture of the major Soviet and satellite military forces. . . .

There has been a relaxation of Soviet restrictions on travel by western attachés. On 29 October the Soviets telephoned permission for a trip by auto from Moscow to Lenin-grad the same day the request was made; such speed in granting a request is highly unusual.

SOVIET BLOC SHIPPING TO CUBA

During the two-day cessation of the quarantine while U Thant is in Havana, three bloc ships--one Soviet tanker (GROZNY), one Soviet dry-cargo ship (BELOVODSK), and one Czech dry-cargo ship (KLADNO)--could reach Cuba. These ships currently are lying dead in the water within 60 miles of the quarantine line.

Four other Soviet tankers, 3 other Soviet dry-cargo vessels, and possibly another satellite dry-cargo vessel are en route to Cuba, the nearest still one day's sailing from the quarantine line.

The Soviet tanker GROZNY has been lying to since early 26 October just inside the quarantine line. The Soviet dry-cargo vessel BELOVODSK, which halted on the morning of the 29th, is about 10 miles east of the line, and the Czech vessel KLADNO stopped at nightfall on 29 October about 60 miles east of the line. / - -

About 15 Soviet dry-cargo ships are currently in Cuban ports. So far there has been no indication of ships moving to Cuba from the USSR to pick up and return bombers and missiles.
